

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This work would not have been possible without the support of the dedicated people at the Jewish Digital Cultural Recovery Project (JDCRP). I am especially indebted to Avishag Ben-Yosef, project manager of the pilot project, Marc Masurovsky, academic director of the pilot project, Dr. Lynn Rother, professor for Provenance Studies and a member of the provenance research and educational materials advisory group for art history, Deidre Berger, executive board chair, and Dr. Wesley A. Fisher, Deputy Chairman of the Executive Board, all of whom gave me precious advice and gave freely of their limited time.

I would also like to acknowledge JDCRP research specialists Claudia Hofstee, Saida S. Hasanagic, and Ariane Moser, without whom the pilot project would never have evolved the way it did.

I am forever grateful to the leadership team of Shalhevet High School in Los Angeles, California, for allowing me to conduct three rounds of focus groups, and permitting me to pilot my curriculum as part of their exploration of the Holocaust before the senior trip to Israel and Poland. I would especially like to thank Dr. Keith Harris, History Teacher and History Department Chair, Rabbi David Block, Head of School, and Daniel Weslow, General Studies Principal, who have been supportive of my project and who worked actively to provide me with the support to take my curriculum into the classroom.

I want to acknowledge the pivotal mentorship of Emmanuelle Polack, director of provenance research at the Louvre Museum, who guided me through my research and provided me with unique opportunities to explore my academic interests. She gave me important personal and academic guidance. I am also grateful for the mentorship provided by Megan Lowery Singer and Meredith Bell, who have been with me since the beginning and pushed me to attain my goals even when I did not believe they were possible.

Nobody has been more important to me in the pursuit of this project than the members of my family. I would like to thank my parents, David and Barbara Abecassis, for their encouragement and for believing in my ability to take on a massive research project while also keeping up my high school studies.

This entire project is dedicated to Hella Heilbronn, who graciously shared with me her life story, as the first Holocaust survivor I met and interviewed. Her bravery and strong determination to educate my generation inspired me to become an advocate for keeping the history of the Holocaust alive.
